

To whom it may concern

I am writing to express my concern over the watering down of the marine parks protections by the federal government.

We need science-based studies that does not involve any business agendas. Evidence-based research means that you take infomation for objective sources. This means no fishing or transport industry bodies being able to influence the decisions made about one of Australia's important legacies.

We have some of the most diverse ocean and shorelines in the world. We MUST protect it and jobs from the aforementioned are not more important than the tourism jobs created by pristine waters.

The most important part of the protection is the life that lives in the ocean and on its shores. Now is the time to make the change where we put our earth and it's biodiversity above humans.

Please take this into consideration and keep up and increase the protection of marine parks!

Sincerely

Adrienne Dewdney
