

To whom it may concern, It is essential that Australia maintains it's extensive network of Marine Parks and that the current plan to drastically reduce the area of protection is reversed.

Australia has a vast wealth of riches beneath it's waters. These marine parks; along with the necessity of tackling climate change and ending the outdated use of fossil fuels; ensure a healthy marine environment bringing in huge revenue through tourism and fisheries. At a time when our marine resources are so seriously threatened it is imperative that measures to protect them are strengthened, not depleted. I call upon this government to do it's job and start protecting rather than decimating the present and future natural heritage of this great, yet desperately vulnerable, country.

Yours sincerely, Jon Graham, Jingili, NT 0810
