

Australia has a responsibility to protect the oceans which surround us, not just for Australia but for the other nations, particularly those in the Pacific. This is not some puddle or dam, separated from the rest of the ocean.

I can think of no justifiable reason for this decision, except that possibly you are responding to the demands of commercial organisations for greater fishing. If you deplete the oceans of the fish, what will be left?

Our marine environment is essential to the future of not just Australia but the world.

Vena Murray

Sent from Mail for Windows 10