

In 1975 New Zealand established Goat Island Marine Reserve (<http://bit.ly/2vXIgKB>). It has proved an outstanding success and proved two major points:

1) Man is by far and away the most destructive force in nature and we should be doing everything possible to restore the balance.

and

2) Marine reserves work for everyone. Ask fishermen where they place their nets and you will find their top choice to be on the boundaries of marine reserves. These reserves act as nurseries where marine life can actually reach full maturity and produce healthy and abundant offspring which migrate to populate adjoining areas.

The kiwi's have worked this out for themselves and now have the world's largest marine reserve. Surely the Ozzy's are not going to let NZ beat them!

Ian T Price
Ian.T.Price@GMail.com
Mob: +44 7580 244 080
QR: <http://bit.ly/ITP-QRcode>