

Dear sir/madam

I'm writing to object to any amount of cutting of the areas of ocean Australia protects. It is imperative that we maintain our Marine National Parks and aid conservation of all marine species for our children's future. In whatever position we hold in society it is our personal responsibility to aid the conservation of nature and the environment but particularly so for our government, that acts for the people of Australia and passes new legislation. Legislation affects the future, and should be forward thinking in its impact and for the greater good. Removing protection from areas of our ocean will not benefit marine species or our oceans.

Thank you for your time

Glenda
