

I am extremely saddened that our government is planning to reduce marine parks in Australia at all, let alone by as much as 50%.

To lead the world in the destruction of marine life is nothing to be proud of, but rather, to be fully ashamed of.

All life is precious and I urge you to reconsider this rash and unnecessary move that will put at risk so many beautiful and already endangered species – species, that once pushed into extinction, we will never see and be inspired and delighted by ever again.

This plan shows this government has fully lost it's understanding of what is really important – and that is the instinctive knowing and acknowledgment of the healing power that being in touch with and walking with nature gives us.

We humans have a duty of care to protect, not destroy the life we share this planet with.

Please increase marine parks, not reduce them.
