

Dear Sir/ Madam

We in Australia are blessed with still largely undisturbed oceanic environment much of which is the richest ocean habitats on earth.

Areas of this ocean are presently under protection and must stay that way especially with the decline in ocean quality and over exploitation in many areas of the world.

Australia with its current protections guarantees survival of so many species.

We owe it to future generations to protect our ocean not sell it off for short term gain.

It is important to note that protected marine areas play a big part in replenishing other areas.

Tourism will be Australasia economic saviour in the future.

The golden goose must not be fried.

Thanks kindly .David.
