

Too much is at stake to allow any area to be removed from that designated to be Marine National Park.

We are already handing on to future generations a world much harmed and depleted by our selfish and wilful attitude towards preservation and conservation.

Surely it is time to look to the future, to make amends for our destructive behaviour and work towards repairing the damage and protecting that which is managing to survive our devil-may-care manner.

Perhaps we should be enlarging rather than limiting our Marine National Parks.
