

I can't believe we're having this conversation again.

We're already having trouble conserving our wildlife and fish stocks. There is no viable reason for us to reduce the size of our sanctuaries, and with current size we still have unacceptable levels of wildlife deaths from longline fishing.

I would like to think that we will have something left for future generations to love and see in the wild. I know that the Liberal mantra seems to be 'if you can sell it, do it', but I'd like to think you're not that cynical (or greedy).

Don't sell off our beautiful wildlife for short term gain. It won't be worth it. Not for you, not for me, not for your future voters.

Thanks,
Kathryn Lamprecht
