

I am writing to you concerning the proposed cutbacks to Marine sanctuaries in Australian waters.

I am appalled to discover this will make Australia the country making least effort to protect the ocean environment.

Surely the government will listen to the current scientific research which emphasises the importance of the worlds oceans for the survival of life on earth.

It is time the plundering of the oceans ended. Why remove conservation areas which protect endangered marine life when we should be increasing the areas not diminishing them.

I hope at a time of increased global awareness this government will see the necessity to maintain the conservation areas in their entirety.

Yours sincerely
Alison Bolas
