

The Government is primarily composed of individuals from Australia's older generations. How is it right that these few individuals make the decision to reduce conservation commitments so that younger generations are the ones to suffer from these effects? The Government is supposed to represent Australian's, but every person I talk to (old and young) would rather coral reefs be protected to sustain our already dwindling biodiversity, over the reintroduction of trawling.

Cut backs on marine reserves are NOT okay.

Cut backs on marine reserves are NOT ethical.

Cut backs on marine reserves are NOT in the best interests of Australian citizens, nor our incredible marine biodiversity.

Cut backs on marine reserves are NOT justified.
