

Australia has wonderful marine environments and natural resources, but we tend to take these for granted. Although our marine regions seem endless, even small but persistent removal of protections can end up destroying large areas and making irreversible changes.

Please take a longer term approach to managing these marine environments, one which values and recognises their importance, and the government's role as a guardian of our environment.

Beverley Wagg

Sent from my iPad