

Hi,

I have just heard that the government is planning on cutting back marine protection. This has to be a backward step. As a planet, we are rapidly destroying our marine wildlife and we simply can't afford to ignore this. By reducing the areas that are protected we can only make the problem worse. Australia is one of the countries with the most amazing marine life. It would be beyond appalling if we were one of the countries with the least protection.

Please rethink this. I'm not sure what gain there would be in reducing protection but I can't imagine that it is worth more than the wildlife involved.

Thank you,
Sally
