

To whomever it may concern,

I received an email today with the distressing news that the present government is considering cutting the current marine protection areas around Australia by up to 50% and allowing more deep sea trawling etc. I am annoyed that this issue has resurfaced after all the time and money it took to put these protections in place originally. Ultimately, I am so very sad that the sanctuaries and the amazing wildlife they contain could be put under such severe stress again with the probability of losing many species all for the sake of money. What a sad world we live in.

I am writing with the hope that this email along with many other like-minded peoples emails may halt the decision to reduce the sanctuary zones.

Nicola williams

Sent from my iPad