

Australia is fortunate to have some of the most iconic marine environments in the world and yet we seem determined to destroy them. We have the responsibility to care for these wonderful waters and the special life that they sustain for the rest of the world. Equador does this for the Galapagos, why cannot Australia, a developed, educated nation not take its responsibilities as seriously?

Kind regards
Amanda Perlinski

Sent from Mail for Windows 10