

To whom it may concern,

I thought, or hoped, the world was moving forward. We understand now better than ever, the damage we have caused to the earth and its environments. Many natural environments are already struggling, especially the great barrier reef. We also now know that our resources will not last forever the way we consume them. How can you even consider reducing our protected marine conservation zones?!

This is such a massive step back.

Once you've chopped down every tree, how do you intend to breathe? Pollute all the seas and you will always be thirsty. We cannot survive without these natural assets. They must be protected! How can you not see that?

Please reconsider and do more to protect our earth.

Kind regards

Paul
