

The oceans need protection to make them sustainable. They are not garbage dumps, nor are they going to continue to provide sources of food if we destroy the few marine parks we have left. The oceans themselves help to mitigate climate change, so by removing protected areas from protection listing means that the impacts of climate change will not only continue to worsen, but the speed at which we see these outcomes will be accelerated.

Sent from my iPhone